D I A R Y

Thursday
3 January 1946

Conferred with General George Brownell and Colonel Odum who is to succeed Brownell.

After lengthy discussion of Central Intelligence, General Brownell expressed the opinion that if the McCormack Plan is to be accepted the Army and Navy should insist on:

1. The head of Central Intelligence, although an employee of the State Department, should not be connected with the State Department Intelligence organization.
2. The Director of Central Intelligence should have two deputies -- one from the Army and one from the Navy, and they should be authorized to go to their Secretaries on important matters on which they disagreed with the Director.
3. Central Intelligence should conduct all espionage and counter-espionage.
4. Central Intelligence should have its own valuation section.
5. All information funnelled to the Central Intelligence Agency should be redistributed to all interested agencies.
